Reducing wait times and investing in new hospitals are the top priorities for improving health care in London area Ontario Medical Association interim public survey results show

Betterhealthcare.ca survey still open for area residents to make their voice heard on local health care issues

LONDON, Ont., Aug. 17, 2021 – Reducing wait times for medical procedures and making it easier to make an appointment with a doctor are the most important ways to improve health care in London and area communities, interim results of one of the most comprehensive consultations in the 140-year history of the Ontario Medical Association show.

In the public survey that is central to the OMA consultation, one question asked people to identify their top priority for improving local health care other than dealing with the COVID-19 pandemic. Almost one third (29 per cent) of the 523 residents of the London area who responded identified reducing wait times.

Eighteen per cent identified improving home care and long-term care for seniors and 16 per cent identified the need for more doctors as their top local health-care priorities.

In a second question, residents were asked what “what is the single most important thing that can be done to improve health-care services in your community today?” More than one third (35 per cent) chose “invest in new hospitals, clinics and medical facilities to improve access, 25 per cent chose “improving the delivery of long-term care” and 25 per cent chose “make it easier to get an appointment with a doctor.”

“These findings are incredibly important in helping us at the OMA develop a plan to improve health care and create a more integrated and sustainable system for all Ontarians,” said Dr. Sharad Rai, chair of the local OMA district, which includes St. Thomas, Woodstock, Brantford and surrounding areas. “This is a huge province and health-care priorities here can be very different from those in other regions like Toronto. By completing this public survey, you help make the voice of the London area heard.”

Among other survey results specific to the London area:

- Sixty-three per cent said their views of the way local health care is delivered have become worse due to the pandemic, nine per cent said their views have improved, and 28 per cent said their views were unchanged.
- When asked to grade the local health care system on a scale of A, B, C or F, 24 per cent of those who responded gave it a B, 48 per cent gave it a C and 23 per cent gave it a failing grade. Five per cent gave it an A.
- Half (50 per cent) of those who responded said the government should give improving health care in this community the same priority as economic recovery from the pandemic and more than a third (33 per cent) said it should be given the highest priority, above all other issues.

- Almost half (49 per cent) of those who responded said that the health-care issues that were important to them and their community were not being discussed at all and one third (34 per cent) said that they were being discussed somewhat.
- When asked to choose the statement that best reflected their views on the way health care is delivered in their community, 36 per cent selected “we need to do more to keep people healthy and out of doctors’ offices” and 21 per cent chose “we don’t have enough doctors.”

More than 7,400 residents in more than 600 communities across Ontario have completed the survey to date. It is part of a broad consultation process that has involved doctors, nurses and other health-care professionals as well as community leaders. The OMA will release its plan to improve health care based on the consultation process this fall.

There is still time for area residents to make their voice heard. The survey will remain open through the Labour Day weekend at betterhealthcare.ca
